

Adam_Reply

Dude, respectfully, I think you made a mistake here. Unless the Old Guard does something to countermand, Oakland County is sending a healthy majority of libertarian-oriented Republicans to the state convention. We were 200-100 supermajority in the 11th district and elected our chair and then our slate of delegates.

It was something. Really significant, based on my considerable experience with the LPM, which I realize is only third party. In fact, I suspect tonight could be the contextual shot fired round the world: this is about saying no to power and the suckups to power. It's a symbolism that won't be lost on the ones who feel they belong in the saddle on top of us.

It doesn't really matter that there are only two contested races, the point is 'the people' are throwing off the reins and spurs and rider. In principle and en masse. And you were key, if not THE key, to the precinct delegate process that made it possible, so I feel especially bad that you were not on hand for what I think quite possibly is the launch of your sterling achievement.

It feels really good to be right AND to have more than enough votes. Thank you, Adam, maybe I'll see you at the state convention, where I'm actually a delegate. (!)